My Healthy Choices: Volunteering

For Audra Hiebert, wellness isn't just about physical health — it's about living with purpose, connection, and a heart for serving others. Giving back has always been a meaningful part of her life, and she believes that even small acts of service can make a lasting impact in a community.

Audra stays actively involved in several organizations that support youth, strengthen families, and help communities thrive. She is the Charter President of the Exchange Club of Des Moines, serves on the Board of Directors for Girl Scouts of Greater Iowa, and is the Treasurer for 100+ Women Who Care Des Moines. She is also an active member of Camping 4 Girls and Chapter B.A. of P.E.O. Through these roles and many hands-on service projects, she works alongside others who share a commitment to strengthening their communities.

Her passion for service started early. Growing up in a family where volunteering was simply a way of life, she saw firsthand the impact of showing up for others and investing time in causes that matter. That example shaped the way she approaches leadership and community today.

For Audra, the “why” behind serving is simple: there is such a need for volunteers in every community. Whether it’s helping with a one-time service project or committing to serve on a board or committee, giving our time and talents truly makes a difference. Strong communities are built by people who are willing to step in, lend a hand, and invest in something bigger than themselves.

Volunteering isn’t just about helping others; it also creates connection, purpose, and a sense of belonging. Being part of that ripple effect is what continues to inspire her to serve. When people come together to care for their community, everyone benefits.

(Giving) Back to School

As a new school year begins, it’s a perfect time to think about “giving back to school” by sharing your time and talents with the young people who fill our classrooms. Volunteering as a mentor is one of the most powerful ways to support students – offering guidance, encouragement, and a steady presence that can help shape their confidence and success. Mentors often report lower stress, improved mood, and a deeper sense of purpose, all of which contribute to better overall health.

But mentoring is just one way to give back. Volunteers can help prepare school supplies, support reading programs, assist with after-school activities, or lend a hand at community events that strengthen families and schools. Staying active through service promotes mobility, builds social connections, and boosts cognitive health, the benefits of which extend far beyond the hours you give.

This fall, as students settle into new routines, consider adding volunteering to yours. Whether you choose to mentor a young person, support another school-related activity, or do something else entirely, your efforts can make a meaningful impact while improving your own well-being. “Giving back to school” is a healthy habit that supports strong schools, strong communities, and a stronger you.

Your Mid-Year “Financial Report Card”

Can you believe we’re already halfway through the year?

January is when many of us set financial goals. We promise ourselves this will be the year to save more money, pay down debt, stick to a budget, or build an emergency fund. By summer, life has usually gotten busy. Unexpected expenses pop up, priorities change, and those goals may have slipped to the bottom of the list.

That is why now is the perfect time for a mid-year money check. You do not need to wait until January to get back on track. A quick review of your finances can help you finish the year stronger than you started.

Check Your Budget

One of the best places to begin is by looking at your spending over the past few months. Pull up your bank or credit card statements and look for patterns. Are you spending more on dining out than you realized? Are there subscriptions you forgot you were paying for? Have grocery trips turned into expensive impulse shopping? Small expenses may not seem like much on their own, but they can add up over time.

As you review your budget, look for a few easy ways to save money:

- Cancel unnecessary subscriptions and memberships.
- Review your streaming services.
- Pack your lunch during the week instead of eating out.
- Plan your grocery trips, make a list, and avoid impulse purchases.
- Cut back on convenience purchases like coffee, snacks, or food delivery.
- Compare prices for services like your cell phone plan, internet, or insurance to see if you could lower your monthly bills.

You do not have to make every change on this list. Even finding an extra $25 or $50 each month can help you reach your goals faster.

Review Your Goals

Next, think back to the financial goals you set at the beginning of the year. Are you making progress? If not, do not get discouraged. Life happens. Instead of giving up on your goals, adjust them to fit your current situation. If saving $100 each month is not realistic, could you save $50? Progress is still progress, even if it happens more slowly than you planned.

Start Saving for the Holidays Now

While you are reviewing your finances, take a moment to think ahead. The holidays may be months away, but they have a way of arriving quickly. Between gifts, travel, decorations, meals, and holiday activities, the costs add up fast. Many people rely on credit cards to cover those expenses, then spend months paying off the balance.

Instead, start building a holiday fund now. Estimate what you normally spend during the holiday season and divide that amount by the number of months left before the holidays. Setting aside a little each month can help you avoid financial stress later and make it easier to enjoy the season without worrying about how you will pay for it.

Finish the Year Strong

A mid-year money check is not about being perfect. It is about making sure your spending still matches your goals and making small changes while there is still time. Even one or two adjustments today can put you in a better position by the end of the year.

Take an hour this week to review your budget, check your progress, and make a plan for the months ahead. Your future self will be glad you did.
